The Serengeti National Park

Serengeti is generally recognised as the major wildlife reserve in the world. It contains the world's largest herds of hoofed animals in the wild. The park is particularly known for the migration of about one million brindled gnus and zebras. According to the season you might get a full impression of this unique spectacle. The exact location of the main mass of the herd of gnus and zebras cannot be exactly predicted. But even if you miss the long treks of wildebeest you can be certain of seeing a large number of non-migratory species.
